

Savvy

When you're driving, there's no better moment than when you find that elusive short cut, turn off from the static traffic and... just for a few delicious metres... there's no one in front of you. Suddenly driving is fun again.

There are enough things that get in the way of enjoying your car. We're not saying that a Savvy will magic them all away, but it will certainly cut some of the issues down to size.

Cutting through

modern life

Tight spots, queues and air conditioning

We all have to park, but finding that perfect space where you can just glide straight in comes around about as often as Halley's comet. It's far more likely that you've got to parallel park in the middle of a busy street, inching in, wondering how close you are to the car behind. Or sit in the queue for a car park on a boiling hot Saturday, wishing you were already out in the sunshine.

To make parking easier, the Savvy comes with reverse distance sensors to guide you into tough spots and power-assisted steering to get you out again. The short body and long wheel base make it highly manoeuvrable, which is ideal on the high street or in your local multi-storey. And if you do have to queue to park, there's air conditioning on all Style models and a CD player and radio across the range to keep you company.

Size, space

Space and size both matter when it comes to cars but in different ways. Space is something you can't have too much of, but if you choose a car that's bigger than you really need, its size can make it harder to park and more expensive to run. So what you need is a car with the same qualities as the Tardis. Small on the outside and spacious on the inside, so it can cope with realities of your everyday life.

and time travel

Just like the Tardis, the Savvy is well thought through and has plenty of interior space. Five doors and four seats make it convenient for both passengers and shopping. The interior configuration is versatile, with split seats that fold all the way forward to make a generous boot even larger. And although time travel isn't a standard feature (yet), the 1.2 litre Savvy is economical to run which is good for your pocket and the environment.

Rap stars, designer labels and central locking

Looking good. Call it posing if you like. Not all of us will admit to it, but most of us do it. Checking out how we look in shop windows on the way to work, taking a moment between floors to appreciate the lift's full length mirror.

Your car is a big part of your image. It's the thing you put on after your coat when you go into town. But great style doesn't have to break the bank these days. Only rap stars and obscure European royals (the ones you've never heard of in 'Hello' magazine) still pay over the odds for big-name labels. The rest of us shop at those well-known cut-price designer outlets. We get the same stuff as the rap star/royal (delete as applicable) but pay 70% less for it. And we look equally stylish in it. (Not to mention, secretly feeling just a little bit smug.)

So if you love your bargain designer labels, the Savvy will suit you down to the ground. The car's got the right look - bee sting aerial, honeycomb rear light clusters, wide-bore central exhaust. Opt for the Style model and enhance the look with chunky 15" alloys. Inside, you get all those finishing touches you'd expect from a big name - Clarion radio/CD player, remote central locking, electric front windows (Style only), funky interior styling and more.

So what will it cost you to look this cool? Less than you might think. And you've got six colours to choose from.
